LOGLINE

How did five men spend nearly 30 years in prison combined, without ever being charged with a crime?

SYNOPSIS

Imagine spending years in prison without being charged with a crime or knowing exactly what you're accused of. A film about the human impact of the "War on Terror," The Secret Trial 5 is a sobering examination of the Canadian government's use of security certificates, a tool that allows for indefinite detention without charges, based on evidence not revealed to the accused or their lawyers. Over the last decade, this rare and highly controversial device has been used to detain five Muslim men for nearly 30 years combined. To date, none have been charged with a crime or seen the evidence against them. Through the experience of the detainees and their families, the film raises poignant questions about the balance between security and liberty.

CROSS CANADA TOUR

After an extremely successful festival run, which saw them capture the 2014 Magnus Isacson Award, as well as a jury nod in the Emerging Filmmaker category at Hot Docs, the team behind The Secret Trial 5 is embarking on a cross-country screening tour. The timing of this tour could not be better, as the debate on the balance between human rights and national security is currently underway in Ottawa.

With an aim to inform the debate around Bill C-51, and to ensure the potential human impact of its measures remains a key part of the dialogue, the filmmakers will engage in discussions and Q&A after every screening. As the film travels from the East to West coast, they hope to generate a wave of dialogue in communities across Canada, as well as online.

TOUR DATES: MARCH 12 TO 25, 2015

Montreal · Antigonish · Halifax · Kingston · North York
London · Kitchener/Waterloo · Guelph · Winnipeg
Saskatoon · Surrey · Vancouver

DIRECTOR'S NOTE

Why I made The Secret Trial 5.

I graduated from York University's Film program in 2009. My graduating piece was a short film called The Good Son, which was based on the true story of Mahmoud Jaballah and his son Ahmad. At the age of 11, Ahmad was asked to translate as CSIS (Canadian Security Intelligence Service) officers interrogated his father in their home. Using him as a proxy, the agents attempted to recruit Mr. Jaballah as a spy, and threatened him with deportation if he didn't comply. What the agents didn't know, and what they would soon find out in court, was that the young Ahmad had hidden a tape recorder under the table, documenting the whole interrogation. That tape would be instrumental in freeing Mr. Jaballah after he was arrested as a terror suspect in 1999. He was arrested once again in 2001, and spent nearly 7 years in jail without charge. You might ask: how is that even possible in Canada? I certainly did.

The instrument used to detain Mr. Jaballah is called a security certificate. It is a cold war remnant that has been transformed into a national security tool in the post 9/11 era. It allows for indefinite detention without charge, and secret evidence, meaning neither the accused nor their lawyers can see the evidence against them. I soon learned that there were other men, four others in fact, who were held under security certificates in Canada. They had spent nearly 30 years combined behind bars without charge.

I made this film because as a Canadian, I find the existence of security certificates deeply troubling. They are contrary to our values as a fair and democratic society. I cannot claim that the subjects of my film are innocent. The truth is, I simply don't know. What I do know is that after 15 years under a security certificate, Mr. Jaballah is still living under house arrest in Toronto, never having been charged with a crime. The young Ahmad is now a dad himself, and yet we still don't know exactly what his father is accused of.

This is a conversation we as Canadians need to have with ourselves. Are we willing to sacrifice the fundamental tenets of justice - the right to a fair trial, and the right to know the case against you - in the name of national security? I hope The Secret Trial 5 can help spark that conversation.

ABOUT SECURITY CERTIFICATES

Security certificates are an immigration tool that allows the Canadian government to deport non-citizens it deems a threat to national security. They have been around in some form in Canada's immigration legislation for over fifty years. In 1978 they were included in the Immigration Act in a form closely resembling their current one, and in 1991 when the Act was updated, further adjustments were made. Over time, and particularly after 9/11, security certificates have morphed into an anti-terrorism tool.

For reasons of national security, the allegations and evidence held against security certificate detainees are never fully revealed, and significant parts of their trials are held in secret. Although the goal of a security certificate is deportation, because many of the individuals issued with them have been found to be at serious risk of torture if returned to their countries of origin, they can be detained indefinitely in Canadian prisons.

A BRIEF TIMELINE

2000 - 2003

The Secret Trial 5 are arrested under security certificates.

APRIL 26, 2006

The Kingston Immigration Holding Centre (KIHC) - dubbed 'Guantanamo North' - opens. KIHC was designed as a long-term holding facility specifically to house security certificate detainees. Hassan Almrei, Mohamed Harkat, Mahmoud Jaballah, and Mohammed Mahjoub were all incarcerated there.

FEBRUARY 23, 2007

The Supreme Court of Canada finds security certificates to be unconstitutional. The case was brought forth by Adil Charkaoui, and was joined by Hassan Almrei and Mohamed Harkat. Despite the unanimous ruling, the Court suspended its decision for one year to give Parliament time to amend the law.

FEBRUARY 22, 2008

Special advocates are introduced to the security certificate system. These security cleared lawyers are allowed to view the secret evidence that the neither detainees or their lawyers can. However, after they view the secret evidence, they are no longer allowed to speak to the detainees about their case, essentially barring them from any meaningful contact from the people they represent.

MAY 14, 2014

The Supreme Court of Canada upholds the security certificate against Mohamed Harkat, finding the process constitutional.

THE SUBJECTS

ADIL CHARKAOUI

Moroccan-born Adil Charkaoui was arrested in 2003 under a security certificate. He spent 21 months in prison and over four years under house arrest before winning his case in 2009. Mr. Charkaoui is married with four children and is currently working on his PhD in French from the Université de Montreal. He received his Canadian citizenship in July of 2014 and is currently suing the Canadian government for over $20 million.

HASSAN ALMREI

Mr. Almrei was born in Syria, and came to Canada in 1999 as a refugee. He was arrested shortly after 9/11 and spent seven years in jail without charge. After an additional year under house arrest, Mr. Almrei won his case in 2009. He is also suing the Canadian government. Mr. Almrei currently lives in Mississauga, Ontario.

MAHMOUD JABALLAH

Mr. Jaballah was a school principal in Scarborough, Ontario when he was first arrested in 1999. The father of six is the only person in Canadian history to endure three security certificates. After his first certificate was dismissed in 2000, a second certificate was issued in 2001. He spent over six years in jail without charge, and is now living under house arrest in Toronto.

MOHAMED HARKAT

Mr. Harkat was arrested under a security certificate in 2002. He spent 43 months in jail before being released under strict house arrest conditions in 2006. Mr. Harkat was recently the centre of the second Supreme Court challenge against security certificates, where the process was deemed constitutional. He lives in Ottawa with his wife Sophie Harkat.

MOHAMMAD ZEKI MAHJOUR

Mr. Mahjoub spent seven years in jail with no charges before being released under house arrest in 2007. In 2009, he made headlines by asking to be returned to prison, saying the house arrest conditions were too damaging to his family. Mr. Mahjoub declined participation in The Secret Trial 5. He currently lives under house arrest in Toronto.
